

ABSTRACT

A method and a terminal for providing services in a telecommunication network wherein the selection data of a service is formed by using the identification and control data of the services located in the multiplexed frames used for transmitting the services. The terminal is designed to display the selection data of the service, which data is formed from the identification and control data of the multiplexed frames for transmitting the service.